Description of the hunt: the hunt takes place in a 600,000 hectare cattle station that has a population of 30,000 head of Brahman cattle. The station is surrounded by natural parks constantly throwing wild buffaloes to the area and this population must be maintained stable to prevent disease transmission between wild buffaloes and cattle. Then, it has to eliminate each year around 1,000 buffaloes to avoid the buffalo population exceed 3,000 head.

The hunters move in the Toyota to the area where the helicopter has located the buffalo herds. With a quick line of four hunters the helicopter launches the herds of buffaloes to the hunter's positions. Like is an operation of population control, it has to fold down the greatest number of buffalo, regardless size, sex, or condition. Properly understood this concept of hunting, very similar to the European boars battues, you have to shoot all possible animals entering in each drive. Later, groups of skippers collect all the meat from the buffaloes. Nothing is wasted. Very good trophies are collected and then also, as many pigs can be taken that come, in the following days, to feed in the carcasses of the buffalo previously hunted.

It could be fired between 400 and 500 rounds to bring down the 100 buffalo expected, which is not an exactly number. 10% less or more, must be accepted without charge or refund for this variation.

The hunt ends when the raids reach around 100 buffaloes and then can go to fishing, hunting pigs or pursuit buffalo trophies with Toyotas.
